MEMORANDUM TO: DDI
FROM: Director of Central Intelligence
SUBJECT: Briefing the President-elect

1. It occurs to me that the President-elect may take me up on my offer for briefings in the areas described in my letter. I think you should give some advance planning to individual experts who might contribute to those specific briefings. I'd appreciate having such a tentative list with the subjects each would presumably cover.

November 9, 1988

The Honorable George Bush
The President-elect
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President-elect:

I have asked that the enclosed notebook be prepared to provide you and the Vice President-elect a concise overview of current national security issues.

Because you have kept yourself fully informed, much of what is included is already familiar to you. The notebook has been designed as a ready reference with facts, graphics and insights that we hope will be helpful to you as you focus more directly on your upcoming responsibilities.

I want to highlight four developments that probably will require U.S. action between now and early spring and several developments of grave but longer range concern for which you also should be prepared. I have tabbed those sections of the notebook that provide additional background.
